

My name is Amy Hagopian and I am a candidate for a delegate position in AFT's AAUP Advocacy Local 6741 of AFT. I bring a decade of experience serving on the board of the University of Washington's AAUP advocacy chapter. Our chapter's motto is, "resist austerity."

I support the platform of the United Faculty for the Common Good, and will work in collaboration and solidarity with others on the slate.

I'm now professor emeritus in public health. I served a term on the Seattle School board, and was a founding member of College Access Now in Seattle, which employed Americorps members to assist low-income, especially immigrant, high school students tackle their college admission applications. I'm incoming chair of APHA's International Health Section this fall, and serve as chair of the editorial board of the American Journal of Public Health. I'm a member of Democratic Socialists of America in Seattle. So I've had a lot of leadership and board experience.

I directed a graduate degree program at UW for 9 years, with 26 faculty and 50 students each year, managing a $1.3 million budget. My academic work focused on how the maldistribution of power and wealth undermines health. My PhD work analyzed the migration of health professionals from poor countries to rich ones. I taught a class on war and health for 9 years at UW, and I led a team to measure war-related mortality in Iraq in 2011, published in PLoS Medicine. I received the American Public Health Association's Sidel-Levy award for Peace in 2018. I'm active in APHA's Peace Caucus, and a leader in the Global Alliance on War, Conflict and Health. I'm co-editing a book on Conflict and Health for a European publisher. I'm the mother of three remarkable adults, and a grandmother of two.

I am asking for your support for my candidacy and those of my fellow UFCG slate members because we believe better universities are possible and worth fighting for. Join us, and help us build higher education for the common good. For more on our slate and its principles, please visit: <http://www.unitedfacultyforthecommongood.org>.
