

It is a pleasure and honor to be nominated for AAUP Council At Large Position. I believe in service and have a commitment to leadership by serving. I've been a Faculty Senator at my current college for the past four years and I serve on several college wide committees. I am very active in my community in service advancing the cause of equity and justice for all, working with various community based organizations. A little background about myself personally, I have advanced degrees in Interdisciplinary Studies in Adult Education with an emphasis on teaching diverse, at risk learners and the other in Political Science with an emphasis in Political Philosophy, both earned at San Francisco State University. I am also an alumnus of the University of California at Los Angeles with an earned Bachelors of Arts degree in Political Science. I have been a Political Science Professor for fifteen years. Now, a tenured Professor at the College of Southern Nevada. I teach courses in American Politics and Government, American Public Policy, Political Philosophy, Social Justice Protest Movements and Women in Politics. I am the author of the textbook / reader Women in Politics, American Public Policy and a current Anthology – Social Justice Movements. I have served as a textbook editor and consultant for McGraw-Hill, Norton Publishers, and Pearson Longman. In the past four years, I have conducted trainings and symposiums across the country based on my teaching methodology and pedagogy affectionately titled, Teaching to Transform – Educating 21st Century Diverse Student Learners. I have presented this training in Washington, DC at the annual conference of the American Association of University Professors, the State of Nevada Diversity Summit, the annual Western Political Science Association, professional development CAPE session at the College of Southern Nevada and this year at the 49th annual National Conference of Black Political Scientists. I hope to be able to represent you in the capacity of Council – At Large and continue my commitment to service and passion for equity and justice for all.
